

Dr. Stavros B.
Thomadakis

Stavros Thomadakis has been educated at Yale University (B.A. in Economics) and the Sloan School of Management, M.I.T. (M.Sc. and Ph.D in Financial Economics). He has held professorships for many years at U.S. Universities (Baruch College, CUNY and Sloan School of Management, M.I.T.) and has been a professor of Financial Economics since 1988 at the University of Athens.

He has published a large number of scholarly articles on banking, finance, theory of the firm and industrial economics, institutional and regulatory aspects of finance, and financial history. He has directed many research projects on European financial development and co – edited three books. He has also supervised a large number of doctoral dissertations both in the USA and Greece, and has served as referee in many professional journals. His current research interests include the impact of regulation on financial market function, the determinants of success of self – regulation, the institutional underpinnings of market efficiency and stability, the development of international standards for the governance of global markets.

He has a long record of national and international public service. He currently serves as chairman of the Public Interest Oversight Board, which was constituted on March 1, 2005 to oversee international audit, ethical, and educational standard-setting activities fore the accounting profession.

He is the former Chairman of the Capital Market Commission of Greece during its formative period, 1996-2004. He has served as Chairman of the Expert Group on Market Abuse of the Committee of European Securities Regulators (CESR).

He has been a member of the Monetary Committee of the European Community, of the Board of Directors of the European Investment Bank, and the Commercial Bank of Greece. He has served several times as member of the Greek Council of Economic Advisers. He has also served as Economic Counselor of the Hellenic Banks Association and as Chairman of the Greek Center of Planning and Economic Research.